Thinking Out Loud

(By S. S.)

President Roosevelt's announcement that he hopes to attend the opening of the Inter-American Conference of Peace in Buenos Aires beginning this December could not have come at any more expedient time. Latin American nations are welcoming and expecting much from United States participation in a Pan-American conference for the first time since about 1823, or since there were any nations below the Rio Grande at all. The first cause for the change in attitude towards the Yankee in the north is the fruit of four years of Franklin Roosevelt's "good neighbor" policy. And the second cause is that Hispanic Americans feel that any committments or agreements made at the conference by United States representatives will find ready acceptance by a people who have so recently demonstrated their entire trust in this President and by an equally friendly senate. President Roosevelt's intentions towards Latin America are felt to be generous and fair and policies dictated by these intentions have now the best chance to be enacted into laws and treaties by the United States.

Whether or not the President finds he can get away from government affairs at home to attend the conference, his well wishes for the success of the conference toward securing a peaceful western family of nations will give the meet an increased importance and chance for accomplishment. Secretary Hull and delegation have already sailed southward ready to enter into negotiations according to executive instructions. Hull is himself a proponent of international good will and has steadily worked towards this end by entering into commercial reciprocity treaties with Latin American nations. The United States delegation will remain discreetly in the background as to the advancement of suggestions during the conference but will lend its wholehearted support to measures it approves. Most Pan-American conferences in the past have been marked by the fear of Hispanic nations that the United States would dictate policies rather than suggest them. This fear has long been a stumbling block in the way towards Pan-American understanding and accomplishment of ideals of peace and commerce.

This new confidence of the southern nations in the United States intentions to give her powerful support to a program for the betterment of all American nations was engendered by the Roosevelt administration's early repudiation of the famous "big stick" policy enunciated first by the President's distant relative, Theodore; by the enactment of reciprocal trade agreements with several Hispanic American nations; and by the withdrawal of the few remaining troops from Haiti. The United States, for almost the first time in her history, was giving concrete evidence of a friendliness for her southern neighbors and of a willingness to treat them with the respect accorded equals. The administration's refusal to accede to demands of certain national groups for interference in Mexico's bitter domestic battle over the Catholic church was, regardless of the merits of either side in Mexico, another example that a new policy of minding her own business and of respecting the sovereignty of her neighbors was in force in the United States.

As is conventional with most large gatherings of nations, a program of questions to be discussed by the delegates has been arranged in advance. Such an explosive matter as the Monroe Doctrine is to be discussed openly with a view to making that intangible, but only too potent creature of the United States a policy to be enacted by twenty two American nations in concert and in defense of their respective rights and sovereignty. The Doctrine would no longer belong to the United States alone and would no longer be used by her alone, just as she saw fit against protesting and beleaguered neighbors. The United States would no longer, if this plan goes through, announce that she and her marines "had the situation well in hand" in some turbulent Central American nation unless she were acting as the agent of an American union of nations and commissioned to do so. Neighbors will be on better terms with one who has renounced her right to meddle at will in their business.

Of primary importance, perhaps, to the nations meeting at the conference will be the question of disarmament. Paring down of arms programs by the Hispanic American nations will have a discouraging effect upon wars such as the recent Paraguay-Bolivia hostilities over the possession of the Gran Chaco region. On this question the United States must take a peculiar position because her needs for arms and fortifications are different from those of the other American states. She could not agree with them to terms of curtailments such as they might decide upon. Therefore delegates from the other nations have been forewarned not to expect United States acceptance of arms limitations suggested by the conference. However, it is possible that a workable and effective program of disarmament will be decided upon by all of the attending nations exclus-

HYDRAULIC MINERS WILL CELEBRATE WORK BEGUN

Next Saturday's meeting of the California Hydraulic Mining Association to be held at Auburn will be a celebration of the actual work begun toward the debris dams.

Major W. E. Harris, head of the engineering staff of the California Debris Commission and R. L. Engenhoff, assistant began the work in Grass Valley and Auburn Friday of assebmlying equipment for an immediate start of preliminary work on debris control dam sites for which an advance allocation of $100,000 has been made by the War Department. This marks the actual beginning of work on the debris dams for which $7,500,000 has been authorized and on which construction will be pushed in 1937.

Used mining equipment such as compressors, drills, hoists, etc, is desired and will be used at the Upper Narrows site on the Yuba River, the North Fork and Ruck-a-Chucky sites on the American rivers. Nothing is to be done at present at the Dog Bar site, as certain legal adjustments are necessary before a start may be made on the Bear river watershed.

PROMINENT EDUCATOR TO TALK HERE FRIDAY

Miss Maud Murchie, a native of Nevada City and head of the State Home Economic Department, will speak at the meeting of the P. T. A. on Friday, November 20.

Miss Murchie received her early education in this city, graduated from the Nevada City high school and the San Jose state normal school and later taught school in Nevada City. Miss Murchie also studied at Columbia University and is now recognized as an outstanding instructor in home economics.

Miss Murchoe's talk will be in the Methodist church parlors at 7:30 o'clock Friday night. The high school, under the direction of Mrs. Marian Libbey will sing during the evening. Mrs. Elza Kilroy is program chairman. The P. T. A. has extended an invitation to the public to attend the meeting.

RURAL USERS OF ELECTRICITY ASK FOR LOWER RATE

In an open letter to the Railroad Commission of California the Twin City Improvement Association has requested that the commission investigate the charges made suburban users of electricity by the P. G. & E. At present users of electricity who live outside of incorporated areas and towns are paying for their electricity at a higher rate than are are city users because rural districts are, according to a previous decision of the commission, expensive to serve with electricity and must be charged at higher rates. A petition bearing 650 signatures most of which are those of residents in nearby suburban, or rural districts has been sent recently to the commission by the Twin City Improvement organization. It is stated that the rural rate is 20 per cent higher than the Grass Valley or Nevada City rate. The petition asks a lower scale of rates, explaining that in most instances the suburban service of local districts is distributed from poles that were put up long ago to carry electricity to the mines. In view of the ease with which electrical energy is diverted from these poles to outlying homes and businesses, and the large revenue which accrues to the P. G. & E. from the mines usage of electricity, petitioners feel that they should enjoy the lower city rate.

FIREMEN PREPARED FOR NEW YEAR'S MASQUERADE

At the meeting of the Nevada City Firemen last Wednesday evening they began plans for their masquerade ball which is to be held in Armory hall New Years eve. This will be the 36th ball for the firemen, the first oone being biven in 1900.

Fire Chief Tony Rore is head of the arrangements for this big affair which is anticipated with pleasure by young and old.

SPORTSMEN BAG QUAIL, PHEASANT, CATCH SALMON

Sunday being the opening day for pheasants and quail many Nevada City sportsmen motored to the Sacramento valley and foothill areas and returned with limits of these birds. Several from this city also motored to Gridley and brought home the limits of salmon. It is stated there were more pheasants than ever before.

E. R. Stambaugh and Frank Ghidotti of Nevada City and William Ghidotti of Grass Valley brought home the limit of ringneck beauties.

William E. Moulton, Bob Gates and J. Curry motored to Sacramento and were joined by Cedric Gates. They got a limit of pheasants in the grain fields below Sacramento.

John Tognarelli and Verne Gleason brought home the limit of pheasants. Others were Dave Richards, Herbert Skeahan, Ralph Pierce, Sargent Huson, Holden Pierce.

Dr. W. P. Hawkins, Charles Leiter, L. G. Lageson and Orrin Tompkins caught the limit of salmon near Gridley in the Feather river Sunday. Dr. Hawkins brought home a 40 pound beauty. Mr. Leiter caught the limit of salmon the largest one got away and his friends state it was larger than the one of Dr. Hawkins.

One local nimrod while in the same district sat on the bank of the Feather river waiting the return of two companions. He stated he saw one old sail, an old scabby, pound and a half salmon, go slowly by upstream.

WORK ON TWIN CITIES ROAD IS NEARLY DONE

The work on the Grass Valley-Nevada City highway which has been in construction for the past month is about to be completed.

The contractors part of the job is done and the shoulders are being put on by the local highway maintenance crew.

When completed, the shoulders will be three feet wide and are made of crushed rock.

The crew is also extending a large concrete culvert at Glenbrook, which has always been a traffic hazard before.

Mr. Garrison, local highway maintenance superintendent, is using approximately ten trucks, a steam shovel, and about fifteen men on the projects.

He hopes to have the work done by this week. When completed, it will not only beautify the road but will make it safer for travel and will last longer.

Great Bay Span Attracts Million Visitors To S.F.

(By H. M. L.)

"San Francisco," as the late President Howard Taft observed on a famous occasion, "knows how." With the largest number of cars ever to enter that cosmopolitan city by the Golden Gate, for the great bridge celebration, there was in all that multitude of approximately a million visitors plus the home population of over 600,000 of the city itself, an all pervading spirit of fun without disorder, and with the hospitable graces that have made San Francisco renowned the world over.

The immensity of the bridge itself and its sheer beauty of massive towers, and enormous gables, all shining in aluminum paint, dwarfs the tiny motor cars that whirl over it in an unending stream in either direction. But everywhere are the traffic police and patrolmen of Oakland, San Francisco and California itself to preserve order, to caution the rural driver, to take off the careless motorists with a flat tire or without gas, to clean up a wreck in a jiffy. For wrecks will happen along the great span with its six lanes, three for traffic in either direction. The bore through Yerba Buena island, high enough it is said to set a seven story building, resounded with motor horns as the traffic passed through.

Those expecting a long look down ward from the outer lanes will be disappointed. There is a wide view of the Marin, Alameda, Contra Costa and San Francisco shores, of the bay and the ships that play serenely across it, but of a look downward, it is not obtainable because of the cables and the parapet that guards the edge of this wonderful highway across the bay. And of course no wise driver will take his eyes off his lane as motorists are expected to make reasonable speed across the bridge, depending upon the lane which they choose. At times 6000 cars an hour passed over the bridge.

The spectacular procession of Friday afternoon and Saturday night were symbolic of the city's fame and the achievement of the bridge. Bridges past and present were the theme of both parades. Huge moving tableaux of historic bridges, such a one as Horatius held against terrific odds in ancient Rome, a Venetion bridge, a bridge of rural Russia, the first bridge such as the CCC boys must sometimes use, a log felled across a stream. There was the bridge of Pont Neuf with its ancient Roman towers at either end.

And drum corps, from the ferry building, to the civic center. The roll of drums never ceased. There were Chinese drums, Checko-Slovakian drums, drums from the Philippines, long narrow drums from savage Africa, big bass drums of every nationality, drums from the Argentine ship in port to the roll of which marched the natty Argentine sea soldiers. The "Philippine Nation" marched, a band of fifty pieces and more drums, sounding a peculiar cadence, half Igorotte and half Spanish, as it were. San Francisco's China Town turned out en mass, especially the girls in their bright Asiatic costumes, of pink, purple, green and yellow.

At the illuminated night parade there were three brigades of Chinese girls in costume carrying beautiful lanters of different patterns for each brigade. A Chinese band wailed weirdly at their head.

And horses! Never before in any California procession probably have appeared so many pure bred Arabians .Magnificent animals, cream colored, black and sorrel, or bay, everyone could be spotted by any admirer of horse flesh by the width of their heads their delicate nostrils and tapering jaws, their proudly curved necks and large intelligent eyes. The "sheriff's posse," a Los Angeles aggregation of orange shirted and black trousered caballeros was perhaps the most magnificent group, with silver mounted saddles, pearl handled revolvers, and such Arabian horses as one rarely beholds anywhere. Another group hardly less spirited or colorful came from a famous Arab horse ranch in Ventura county.

At intervals along the line of march were bands of music. There were perhaps fifty bands, some of them from distant parts of California. There was the Los Angeles police band, the San Francisco police band, the Salvation Army band, which varied the pubilant note of other bands by playing some of the grand old hymns as they marched. There was the band of the California Grays, the band of the Filipinos, the Argentine band: There were numerous bands wearing smocks and liberty caps. The Presidio bands turned out and from the warships in the harbor came naval bands. There were bands from the colleges. The University of California sent its blue and gold band into line, and there in the first line was Carl Murchie of Nevada City blowing bravely on his trombone.

Los Angeles easily captured the first prize, if one were offered, with its float, the splendor of which exceeded all its splendid competitors in the illuminated parade. The Napa county float using colored balloons fashioned into great bunches of grapes, was perhaps a close second to Los Angeles in the illuminated procession of gorgeous floats. The beautiful floral float of the San Francisco park commission was also among those to receive great applause.

Along the route of these parades from the Ferry building and around the square in the civic center were packed easily a million happy people. Fathers with their kiddies astride their necks stood patiently in line, seeing nothing but the very tops of the floats, while their youngsters had a good view. Enterprising truck drivers sold soap and goods boxes at 10 cents for the short humans to stand on. And after the show was over they made the rounds gathering them up.

The grand stands at the Civic center for the night parade were not filled, and with characteristic San Francisco hospitality the police, at half past eight, shoed the people who stood on the sidewalks and in the streets, into the grandstands, where they hobnobbed with the proud possessors of seats that cost $2.50 good for both parades.

Among those from Nevada City who crossed the bridge and saw the great spectacle were Mr. and Mrs. Emil Ott, Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Bennetts, Mrs. Will BcGuire, Mrs. Arthur Hoge, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Schreiber and family, Mr. and Mrs. R. N. McCormack, Mr. and Mrs. James Penrose, Ralph E. Deeble, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Leete, Mrs. Marrietta LosKamp.

New York's Example

(From San Diego Sun)

New York State, Director Lowney of the California Safety Council reports, has made several changes in her traffic control regulations which promise results provided that the New York public is ready for a really serious attempt at traffic regulations.

The regulations propose nothing novel or radical. On the contrary they embody suggestions which have been advanced innumerable times by traffic control authorities and motorists. They do, however, challenge all motorists to face the promoting of traffic discipline as a serious business, and not an amusing little game.

One of the new police orders proposes to hold motorists strictly accountable for breaking the law. Under it first offenders may be sentenced to 30 days in jail or fined $100. Three-time losers may be sentenced to 180 days in jail or be fined as much as $500. Speed of more than 40 miles an hour requires the driver of a passenger car to prove that he was not driving recklessly if he is brought into court so charged. This regulation also does not forget the trucks. Motor trucks of less than two tons are limited to 20 miles an hour; larger trucks to 15.

Another regulation simply proposed to put teeth in the examinations for drivers' licenses. Under it an applicant must actually demonstrate two things; that he is reasonably fit physically, namely that he can see and hear, can use his arms and legs reasonably well and can think sufficiently fast to meet the routine emergencies which every driver must meet if he, or others encountering him, are to live out their natural lives.

A third rule requires that drivers' records, good, bad and indifferent, are to be recorded on their licenses open to examination by traffic officers and the courts.

California, which is now in the process of tightening up its traffic regulations might well follow this example, Mr. Lowney remarks on behalf of the Safety Council. And every Californian who seriously considers the need of the Safety Regulations will endorse this suggestion, we believe.

But if past experience with traffic regulation means anything it will not be enough to write new and more stringent regulations into the traffic laws. The New York proposals seem sensible, reasonable and enforceable if one requirement is met, namely that the general public, and particularly the motoring public, can be persuaded to approve and accept the new policy.

The California Safety Council itself represents an intelligent attack upon this underlying difficulty in the way of improving traffic discipline. For some time now it has been workng all over the state, distributing information on traffic control, urging public cooperation with traffic authorities, and warning motorists of the sacrifices they must make in order to make the streets and highways more safe for all who use them.

We believe that the California Safety Council is making real progress in this undertaking. If we are correct in this California soon may be ready to impose really rigid discipline with solid hope of success.

A New Beginning

(Contributed)

Although the nation still echoes reverberations of the Roosevelt landslide, nevertheless enough time has passed now, to make clear the spirit in which the people view that unprecedented phenomenon.

It is a spirit which reaffirms in no uncertain manner the basic, deeply-rooted character of American democracy. It is giving meaning to the statements exchanged between the victorious candidate and the vanquished one on election night, statements which subsequent reactions could have proved mere formal, necessary but meaningless words. No one knew, then. The antagonisms of the campaign had been sharp and bitter.

But today Landon's "Every American will accept the verdict, and work for the common cause of the good of our country," and Roosevelt's "I am confident that all of us Americans will now pull together for the common good," ring true in the light of an attitude now apparent everywhere.

Not that opposition to the present leadership is dead, or that it will not be vociferous at times, in the near future. It will and should be so, since an active minority, offering constructive criticism, is the fire that tempers the steel the majority's leaders mold.

But with campaign bitterness gone, there is a new cooperation in deep, essential, purposes, wherein the minority promises to abstain from willful sabotage, and the majority from ignoring the rights of the minority. May it always be thus.

In a sense, America is off to a fresh start in life, a new beginning, a clean new shot at prosperity and progress.

BRUSH BURNING IS STILL OUT OF SEASON

CAMPTONVILLE, Nov. 16.—During the past few weeks of Indian summer weather, several fire alarms have been turned in by the look outs to the local forests ervice headquarters, and upon checking out the reports, the fires were due to persons burning brush.

This has caused the local headquarters considerable unnecessary fire runs, consumes time which can be put to better purpose and causes unnecessary expense. Many people are not aware that the law relative to fire and brush burning was changed two years ago so that now the fire season runs from April 15 until December 1. rather than May 1 to October 15, such as it used to be. It is therefore just as unlawful to burn now as it would be in July. Many believe that because of a rain two weeks ago, vegetation was dampened enough to permit burning. The weather bureaus record of rain fall this season to date totals only .45 of an inch which is not enough to make brush burning safe.

Those who wish to burn during the fire season, when and where it is safe, must obtain a permit from the forest service before doing so. The amended act relating to fires as amended appears in the Statutes to the Codes Chapter 311, page 749, amending Penal Code Sec. 384. Those living in a rural and mountainous country should read these laws in order to be conversant with the subject. The law governs private land as well as public land.

They Carry The Mail

(Contributed)

Probably the most unpraised, unsung, and unappreciated enterprise in these United States is that ever faithful, ever functioning institution known as the post office.

It is high time somebody spoke a word for it, and it is, this month, an appropriate time as well. The first government post office was opened just 153 years ago at New York, in November, 1783.

The only time we notice the post office particularly is when it makes a mistake, which is about once in a blue moon or so. But someday some enterprising movie producer will wake up to the exciting character and the exciting history of the postal service, and we'll have a screen epic comparable to the best of Hollywood colossals.

With the swift, sure precision and uncanny accuracy of clock-work, trucks and trains and ships and airplanes make split-second connections, day in and day out, to keep the vast network of postal channels carrying the mail to John Q. Public.

California, you know, played a leading part in the most adventurous chapter in post office history—the Pony Express. One day in April, 1850, the first riders between Sacramento and Missouri started from each place. And they rode like overzealous Paul Reveres, changing horses every ten miles, using 420 in all.

Today your letters have the speed of wings. But the postal tradition, unchanged through the years, is still—the mail must go through!

LEGISLATURE TO REVAMP STATE ELECTION LAWS

(By RALPH H. TAYLOR)

A thorough revamping of California's election laws, designed to plug loop-holes and eliminate abuses which came to light during the recent campaigns, promises to become a major order of business at the forthcoming session of the state legislature.

The proposed changes in election procedure, which are intended to curb the operations of political card sharps, will be aimed primarily at strengthening the initiative and referendum according to post-election discussions.

One of the most flagrant abuses which the lawmakers will seek to taboo is the discredited trick of "rolling two-in-one!" This consists of combining a good measure with a bad measure in a single proposal and snaring the perplexed voter into giving the hodge-podge his blessing on election day.

When the lawmakers meet at Sacramento in January, three principal changes in the initiative and referendum laws will be sought as a result of the bitterly- contested 1936 campaigns, as follows:

1. A definite limitation on the scope of initiative proposals and constitutional amendments, restricting each measure to a single subject. A somewhat similar restriction already obtains with regard to legislative statutes, but does not extend to measures submitted direct to the people. This limitation is designed to prohibit "riders" or "sleepers" and to prevent "two-in-one" proposals which confuse and mislead the voters.

2. Tightening of provisions regarding the titling of ballot acts to insure titles which are truly descriptive of the subject matter of the measures presented. More stringent restrictions would also be placed on the titling of initiative and referendum petitions, as well as the measures themselves.

3. Limitation on the time in which petitions may be circulated to qualify initiative measures to the two-year period preciding the election at which the measures are to be submitted. This change is designed to prohibit the use of "old signatures" augmented by "supplemental petitions" to qualiify a measrse for a later election which had failed to qualify when originally presented.

At least a half dozen measures appeared on the ballot this year which embodied some or all of the evils which the legislature will seek to correct.

The "Single Tax" Sales Tax Repeal Act, which was barred from the ballot by action of the State Supreme Court, was a glaring example of all three abuses. Finally thrown out by reason of a deceptive and misleading title, it also exemplified the "two-in-one" trick at its worst, with the bait of sales tax repeal being used in an attempt to induce the people to establish the "Single-Tax". an exorbitant land tax which would have resulted in the wholesale confiscation of homes and farms. Likewise, the "Single Tax" Sales Tax Repeal Act had failed to qualify for the 1934 election and the old petitions were used, plus new petitions circulated after its first failure in an attempt to place the measure on the ballot at this year's election.

Although some of the charges of misrepresentation and trickery during the recent campaigns were undoubtedly groundless, no one can deny that some of the measures were flying under false colors and represented an attempt to dupe the voters.

For the welfare of both the people and government, the legislature should do everything possible to prevent tricking of the electorate and to facilitate the consideration of issues on their merits.

California agriculture, having escaped the threat of the deceptively-titled and deceptively presented "Single Tax" only because some one had the good judgment to force the question to a supreme court decision. will look with favor on any action which the legislators may take to require an honest presentation of public issues.

LAKE MEAD TO BE ANOTHER U. S. PARK FOR PEOPLE

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16. — Details of the plan by which the National Park Service becomes responsible for operation of Lake Mead as a recreational are in close cooperation with the Bureau of Reclamation, which will continue to operate Boulder Dam and Boulder City, were approved today by Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes.

In making the announcement, Secretary Ickes said: "Boulder Dam and Lake Mead have become one of the principal tourist attractions of the country. The numbers visiting the area for the purpose of seeing Boulder Dam still are increasing. In addition the scenic playground of Lake Mead and its magnificent surroundings is growing in popularity although, until this time, it has been impossible to do much to make this area more easily accessible to the public. The experience of the National Park Service in developing virgin recreational areas will be applied to both Lake Mead and the fishing grounds below Boulder Dam in El Dorado canyon for the purpose of providing the public with the best opportunities to see them."

Under the arrangements made, the Bureau of Reclamation will have complete charge of Boulder Dam and supervision of the power house. It will provide a guide service for those desiring to go into the dam ntself and to inspect at close range the gigantic generators and turbines in the power house. It will control the flow of water through the penstocks and outlets in conformity with the needs at the power house and the cities and irrigated farms down the river.

The Bureau of Reclamation also will have charge of Boulder City, the town it built to house the employees at the dam and power house. The city manager form of government will be continued and facilities for accomodations of tourists will be expanded.

The National Park Service will have a free hand in the development of the recreational possibilities of Lake Mead and El Dorado Canyon. It will have charge of the roads and trails, with the exception of those in Boulder City and the Lower Portal Road. The latter will be reserved for the use of those operating the power house. Gates will be established in order that a proper check may be made of those entering, the reservation. The National Park Service also will control the Boulder City airport. Operation of boats on Lake Mead and sightseeing airplanes will be under its supervision. Through traffic, private or public, on the Kingman, Arizona, to Las Vegas, Nevada highway, which crosses Boulder Dam will not be impeded.

The National Park Service will operate the recreational area without interference with grazing along the shore of Lake Mead. Prospecting and mining operations within the area will be permitted, subject only to applicable federal laws governing mining on the public domain, except only where they will interfere physically and directly with a legitimate recreational development.

The decision to refrain from invoking the usual ban by the National Park Service against prospecting and mining within recreational areas under its supervision was reached because this area embraces a large part of the states of Arizona and Nevada to which mining is of great commercial importance.

ive of the United States, who will, through her delegates, support such a program.

A definite change in the stand of the United States upon neutrality occurred early in the Roosevelt administration. Before this the protection of and insistence upon rights of neutrals had been prominent in the foreign policy of the Federal Government. The new attitude became one of limiting the activities of its citizens and limiting the protection they might expect from the government when the United States is a neutral nation at the time of hostilities elsewhere in the world. The Neutrality Act read that the United States would supply no arms, ammunition or implements of war to belligerent nations in time of war nor would the United States lend any money to combatants. By the act the president was empowered to proclaim that all shipping to belligerents would be conducted at the exporters' own risk and that citizens of the United States in belligerent territories would not be guaranteed safety by their government. The act, designed to keep the United States out of entanglements or embarrassments that might lead to war will serve as a model for one to be introduced to the Inter-American Peace Conference. The Hull delegation hopes that the Neutrality Act of the United States will be considered by the American nations attending the Conference and enacted into laws that will guarantee further peace in the western hemisphere.

Along with the neutrality plan will be offered another brain-child of an American, Assistant Secretary Sumner Welles. A plan to conciliate any problems that might be sources of future wars is to be presented at the Conference, although not directly by the United States because of her delegation's choice to remain modestly inarticulate as to suggestions. Nevertheless both neutrality and conciliation ideas were born in Washington.

It is undoubtedly the hope of the Administration that this Conference will mark the death of much of the unpopularity of the United States among the nations of Hispanic America. Certainly the "good nighbor" policy of the last four years has been directed towards the end of attenuating this resentment felt towards the United States by her southern neighbors; of building the basis for an exemplary peace among the Americas; and of enlarging an international trade that has just begun to demonstrate what benefits it could bring to our producers and shippers in the future. The Monroe Doctrine never was a law. It was never recognized as such by any peoples on earth except by ardent proponents of Yankee imperialism. It was ridiculed openly by Great Britain on its early pronouncements. In Hispanic America it resulted in hatred of the Yankee and in distrust and mutual misunderstanding. Many in the United States have regarded it as a sacred law, they in Latin America as a rank imposition. There may have been justifications for the Big Stick but these were not understood by peoples upon whom the stick fell. An enlightened self interest in relations with Latin America was needed by the United States. The policy of the last years and the ideals of cooperation set forth in the recent presidential address upon the Inter American Peace Conference seems to be at least a beginning of an answer to the need.

JOOSS BALLET COMING TO SACTO.

Returning to the United States for a second tour which will include for the first time, the Pacific Coast, the famous Jooss European Ballet, will appear December 2 in Memorial auditorium. The ballet, celebrated as one of the three great ballets of the world, has gained world applause for its portrayal of tragedy, comedy, and satire through the medium of dance movements and facial expression.

Among the ballets to be presented will be the famous "Green Table" a satire on international diplomace.

In it. Kurt Jooss, founder of the ballet, sets forth his most convincing arguments for world peace in terms that cannot miss their point. This ballet took first price at the International Congress of the Dance held in Paris in 1932, and has been demanded by audiences throughout the world ever since.

Other ballets to be presented in Sacramento by this company of 24 artists, include "The Big City," which portrays modern European life to the excellent jazz-like music of Alexandre Tansman, and "A Ball in Old Vienna," an exquisite re-creating of the gay and gallant life of the 40's enlivened by the sentimental intrigues of fair ladies in crinoline and their ardent swains, and danced to the intoxicating waltz strains of Joseph Lanner, rival of Johann Strauss.

The ballet company is comprised of dancer from Russia, Hungary, Poland, Austria, Germany, Switzerland Esthonia, Holland and three from the United States. The three Americans are Louise Solberg from Seattle, Bethene Miller from Union, Ore., and Edward Harrington from Butte, Montana.

The Jooss ballet has gained the world's applause for its portrayal of drama through the dance rather than through mere prettiness of presentation which characterizes such ballet. According to Jooss, the ideas portrayed deal mostly with contemporary life. "In my ballets," he says, "we combine drama, comedy, or satire with an intricate, yet clear, dance pattern. Our artistic impulse is emotionally one with other forms of contemporary art."

The presentation of the ballet will be the second attraction of the Sacramento music series.

THE RED GOD MARS

Diana, fearless archer of the skies,
From her fixed place among the stars,
Strike down with deadly venomed dart
The Red God, Mars.

Long have the tortured nations borne his sway,
Too weak and stupid to rebel;
Long have sad mortals trodden in his wake
The crimson road to hell.

He nods and we unfurl a battle flag
And shriek an uncouth battle cry;
Then wreak his vengeance on our human kind,
Nor reason why.

There is no glory in this thing called war,
Each sword is tarnished, every scrutcheon stained;
All the slow gain of peaceful years laid waste
All life itself profaned.

"A war to end all wars?" Oh, cruel jest!
On ancient battle fields new banners wave;
The world has broken faith with those who died,
Betrayed the trust they gave.

Let now the God of Reason take command,
The weary nations seek relief;
Brand every war lord for the thing he is;
Insatiate monster, murderer and thief.

Diana, fearless archer of the skies,
From her dread place among the stars,
Strike down with dealy venomed dart
The Red God, Mars.

INTERNATIONAL LAW NEEDED TO INSURE PEACE

BERKELEY, Nov. 12.—Pointing to a new series of "invasions" against the peace and security of the world, Professor Frank M. Russell of the Political Science department of the University of California, told an audience gathered in Wheeler Auditorium on the University campus recently that the United States must combine with other nations to lay the foundations of future international peace.

This does not mean, said Prefossor Russell, that the United States should abandon her policy of "no entangling alliances," however, she should be prepared to support an international authority endowed with the power to see that the will of the civilized states is obeyed by strong as well as weak nations and that treaties are not treated as scraps of paper.

The University lecturer deplored the erection of post war trade barriers which, he said, are leading to a world of authoritorian states based on a policy of economic self-containment and isolation. This policy is supposed to contain the recipe for keeping out of war, but, according to Professor Russell, would have the opposite effect of assuring wars for the dwindling supplies of raw materials which the world contains.

What the world needs in the economic field, said Professor Russell, is the leveling of trade barriers and the adoption of policies looking toward the maximum circulation of goods and ideas. The world must point, he said, toward the ultilization of the world's resources for the good of all the peoples and the development of world trade rather than the cornering of natural resources and the restriction of trade.

Policies based on the prevention of war through disarmament and multi-lateral treaties such as the Kellogg pact which are founded on the force of public opinion have failed, said the lectutrer. The future peace and security of nations depends upon the development and universal acceptance of a system of international law which will be enforcable by the family of nations.

Several other hunters who killed limits of pheasants in the Biggs district Sunday were: Howard Penrose, Carl Larsen, Herman Peterson, Delbert Schiffner, Glenn Ralph and Holden Pierce, J. P. Muscardini and Tom Curry.

Private Diary
(of a young lady)

ON THURSDAY: This afternoon served at a pink tea for sweet charity. The Great Competitor Lil there. . . was no charity in my soul when I looked upon her. Must be sure to look my best for Sat. eve. A date with Him . . but Lil there too!

ON FRIDAY: A new gown and hat . . . "inspired by King Edward's Adriatic holiday" they told me. I practiced courtly poses before my mirror. To CHARLES and a coiffure that accented dress and gown.

ON SATURDAY: Lil there in all her glory . . . her "staking" way soon evident in pretty, calculated smiles towards Him. But a glance in the mirror of my own exotic headdress with its wreath of tiny flowers gave me confidence . . . a wonderful time. Lil choked (I hope).

ON SUNDAY: Ride with Him after supper. My progress excellent. He asked if there were any other man. "Oh, no, none . . . . none but CHARLES the indispensible . . . and he an ally, not a rival!" And He agreed.
